plans would force a cut in the price of Arabian light, they said.

The prospect that Nigeria would roll back some of its October price cut, and that OPEC was approach-ing a decision on prices, helped oil markets recover from a turbulent session Monday. There was little change in prices Tuesday on the spot, or noncontract, market.

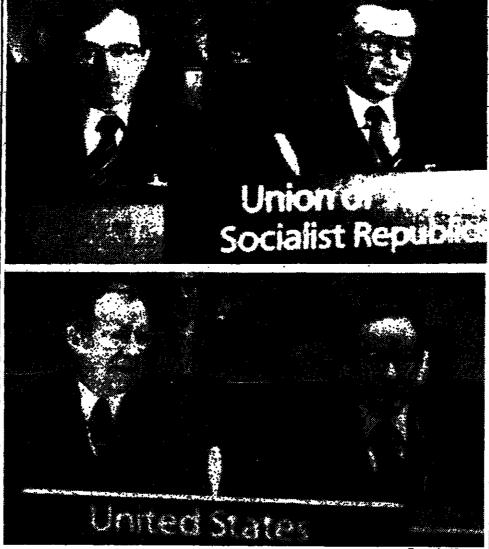

Arabian light crude for February delivery continued to be quoted at $27.60 a barrel on the spot market, according to Telerate Energy Service, a private market-information business. West Texas Intermediate crude, the major U.S. grade of oil, rose to $25.40 a barrel for March delivery in spot markets, after dropping below $25 on Monday, a five-year low.

None of the acrimony that marked Monday's meeting was evident Tuesday. On Monday, the oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, Mana Said al-Oteiba, walked out temporarily, accusing the Nige-rian minister, Tam David-West, of undermining the OPEC pricing go to Congress on Feb. 4. The economic forecast to be presented with the budget includes sig-nificantly lower inflation rate this year than had been predicted as recently as a month ago, according to economists who helped prepare it. The administration's expectations on growth and unemployment remained constant. Under the administration projections, the deficit would be held to $140 billion in fiscal 1988, nearly $40 billion more than Mr. Reagan estimated recently. After a White House meeting with Mr. Reagan and his top economic advisers, the Finance Committee members said that rigid opposition to further reductions in the administration's military spending proposals could jeopardize congressional support for oth-

The senators, who were joined at the White House by Republicans on the House Ways and Means Committee, advised Mr. Reagan to proceed first with spending cuts before seeking a simplification of the federal tax code. Republican congressional leaders said Monday after meeting for an hour with President Reagan that the White House would delay submitting a tax-simplification bill to Congress for several months, The

The prosecutor, Leszek Pietrademanded that Captain Piotrowski be hanged for his part in the murder of the Reverend Jerzy Popieluszko on Oct. 19. The three men accused with him are Colonel Adam Pietruszka, who was charged with instigating the crime, and Lieutenants Waldemar Chmiclewski and Leszek Pekala, both accused of participating in the killing. All except Mr. Pietruszka have pleaded guilty.

to a bitter attack upon Father Popieluszko, who he said had "taken extreme positions that gave birth to no lesser an extremism, culminating in the crime."

The prosecutor repeatedly linked the murdered victim's attitude to those of his killers.

The statement, at points delivered in a rising voice by the prose-cutor, provided the clearest assessment available so far of how the government of General Wojciech Januzelski weighs the political impact of the crime and the trial.

The prosecutor emphasized three points: that the accused acted alone: that their act was political provocation aimed against the government's policies of social reconciliation; and that the authorities of the Roman Catholic Church were partly responsible because they did not muzzle the dissident priest.

The prosecutor showed some sympathy for the youngest defendants, Mr. Pekala, 32, and Mr. Chmielewski, 29, when he said they had been enticed into the plot through misguided loyalty.

He strongly attacked Mr. Pictraseka 47 on trial for aiding and abetting the crime, for having inspired the murder plan and for tryagainst Mr. Piotrowski in which he

When the court resumed, the prosecutor changed both his tone and his target, beginning his attack on Father Popieluszko. Mr. Pietrasinski said that Father Popieluszko had "tried to convince the faithful that the Polish government was anti-democratic. He said the priest had cast doubt on the "legitimacy of this government" attacking Poland's friendship with the Soviet Union. The prosecutor said the priest had traveled around the country spreading anti-government propaganda. "I know one should not speak ill of the dead," said the prosecutor, but these things have to be said."

He tried repeatedly to associate the victim with his killers, once by noting that while the state authorities were clearly taking action to punish the "functionaries who Mr. Pietrasinski devoted nearly a break the law," church authorities third of his three-hour summation were showing "too great a tolerance for certain priests who used their religious position to agitate against the government.

Throughout the trial, Mr. Pietrasinski has insisted that the activities of the dissident priest were germane to the proceedings since they explained Mr. Piotrowski's stated motives for the crime.

Mr. Piotrowski has insisted that he was driven to pursue Father Popieluszko because of his frustration at the government's failure to prosecute politically active clerics who supported the outlawed Solidarity

The prosecutor said the priest's murder was in fact a provocation aimed at the policies of the governhe said of the defendants, "their act helped Poland's internal and external enemies.'

He said that a search for a possible instigator was continuing. He added that that figure could turn out to be either an opponent of recent Communist Party decisions or someone associated with "foreign security services of capitalist

Egypt Under Mubarak: Stability Restored, but Hard Choices Put Off

By David B. Ottaway Washington Post Service

CAIRO - After more than three years running Egypt, President Hosni Mubarak has succeeded in restoring stability to a society traumatized by the assassination of Anwar Sadat. But he has failed to project any overall vision of the country's future or strategy for dealing with its gargantuan problems.

The Egyptian leader has made his hallmark a cautious, slow-motion approach that, to critics, at times

"He is obsessed with security," an Egyptian political commentator said of Mr. Mubarak, "and he is overly cautious." Neither beloved nor disliked by his people, Mr. Mubarak, at 56, has yet to make his own mark on

But while the courts have succeeded in reopening Egyptian politics to some opposition parties, the government bureaucracy and the ruling party have time and again blocked proposed changes and fought to preserve their powers.

The result has been that the ruling party and government often seem to execute policies against the declared intentions of Mr. Mubarak. This gives outside observers the impression that Mr. Mubarak is not fully in control.

The question being increasingly posed by Western analysts is how Mr. Mubarak will fare now that he has overcome the "Sadat legacy" and begins lacing problems of his own making

Gasoline Price War Looms in France

LUXEMBOURG (Reuters) — The European Court of Justice, in a ruling that seemed certain to set off a price war among service stations in France. Tuesday upheld the right of a French entrepreneur, Edouard Leclere, to sell gasoline at cut-rate prices.

Mr. Leclere's attempt to entice shoppers into his supermarkets by offering more than double the discount allowed under French law at regular service stations was opposed by the French government. The major petroleum companies, Elf Aquitaine and Cie. Française de Raffinage had already indicated they were set for a price war if the verdict went Mr. Leclerc's way.

The court ruled that the method the French government used to calculate its minimum price breached European Community rules.

French courts have already ruled in favor of Mr. Leclerc, who heads a family with the reputation of France's most aggressive cut-rate traders.

Last week the French government, anticipating the court's verdict, announced its intention to adapt the price law that dates from 1928.

The maximum discount allowed in France was 17 centimes a liter (8 cents a gallon), whereas Mr. Leclerc offered 35 centimes a liter. Gasoline

Moslem, Coptic Discord Another test for Mr. Mubarak, perhaps his most important, will be Again Brewing in Egypt

CAIRO - Militant Moslem fundamentalists are on the march again in Egypt and the first signs of a resumption of sectarian discord are surfacing.

Arousing little notice or comment here, they met Jan. 18 in one Mesgid Ennur Mosque, to hear a sheikh recently released from prisreturned to his papal seat."

Jihad members in September, Moslem militants have again been coming out in numbers.

They are active and well-organized on the university campuses. They made a strong showing in December elections, capturing the of their old gathering places, the majority of student council seats at the engineering faculty of Cairo University. At street corners in downtown Cairo and at busy traffic stops, bearded men dressed in white are again appealing on bullhorns to passersby for donations to build new mosques.

Pope Shenudah, hardly back from his banishment to a desert monastery, has already given inter-views that even some Christians say they regard as verging on the politi-. cal and unnecessarily provocative.

There have been no reports of incidents between Moslem and Coptic militants, But the release of henudah, an activist by nature. and the revival of Moslem militants seem to be setting the stage for sectarian trouble. It has already started again between Moslem militants and security forces. In mid-November, surdents at the Islamic Al Azhar University noted and clashed with thousands of police of the Central Security Force police, a special urban anti-riot force, after a student three formidable conflicting political blocs. Two of them, the rising Wafdist current and the Moslem fundamentalists, are hostile to the 1952 revolution and want to change radically the existing order. The third force, the 315,000-man army, remains silent but is unlikely to allow power to slip. Egyptian and foreign analysts agree that Mr. Mubarak inherited a heavy political legacy from Sadat. The assassinated president had alienated almost every segment of society in the last months of his rule - Moslem fundamentalists, Christian Copis, leftist and rightist politicians, intellectuals and business-

It took Mr. Mubarak until early this month, or three years and three months, to absolve himself of this "Sadat legacy." The final step was ending the banishment to a desert monastery of the Coptic Christian patriarch, Pope Shenudah III, and his reinstatement. This has gone a long way toward appeasing Egypt's five to six million Coots.

On Sept. 30, a special security court made another decision that assuaged the Moslem fundamentalists: 174 extremists implicated in an uprising in the southern town of Asyut immediately after Sadat's assassination, in which 87 persons died, were acquitted; 107 others were sentenced to prison terms ranging from two years to life imprisonment but nobody was exe-

But the al of the United Natious and Vietpact will help Israel's long-term nam's prime minister and foreign economic prospects by increasing its exports to the United States and by directing more American invest-

Israel already has a free-trade pact with the European Community, the second-largest market in the world, ranking just behind the United States.

The pact will not be made public or signed, however, until key congressmen and advisers in the private sector from affected industries in the United States have a chance to review it. This process is likely to be completed within 45 days, administration trade officials said.

Egypt, Israel Fail to Reach Pact on Taba

BEERSHEBA, Israel - Three lays of talks on a border dispute between Egypt and Israel ended Tuesday with the two sides failing to reach a final agreement, Israeli sources said.

The sources said agreement was reached on technical aspects of deploying a multinational force in the disputed Red Sea resort of Taba. But they said Israel rejected Egypt's demand that Israeli border police be completely withdrawn from the 250-acre (101-hectare) tract, which includes an Israeli-run hotel and holiday village.

Ehud Gol, a spokesman for the Israeli Foreign Ministry, said the two sides would issue a paper sum-ming up the three days of talks. He said that a few points could not be answered Tuesday and that he expected further talks at a later date would be necessary.

Officials have said that the talks may be reconvened at Ismailia, on Chiefs of Staff. In the cable, which General Westmoreland supported in a brief message to General Wheeler the next day, General Abrams minimized the abilities of the self-defense forces, opposed their contin-ued inclusion in the order of battle and warned that the press would draw "an erroneous and gloomy conclusion" from new intelligence estimates that would increase the number for those forces from

Mr. McCloskey said he was 'shocked" when he read the documents "and I told Adams, I may even have been the one who used the word, that I thought it was a conspiracy" by General Abrams and General Westmoreland and by Robert W. ## Botha Tries Bargaining

Echoes of the new constitution introduced its certainty that he is pursuing racial integrain South Africa last year continue to reverberate. By offering a political voice to the Asian and mixed-race minorities but not to the black majority, it produced a wave of black unrest. The government responded evasively with a vague promise of black "political participa-tion." Black agitation surged, the white business community started declaring that apartheid is bad for business and anti-apartheid pressures, popular and official, began building in America. Result: President P.W. Botha, insisting that Pretoria will not bend, is bending on the key issue of black political rights.

His latest step is an unprecedented hint of a political role for urban blacks, who work in the white economy and live outside the artificial "homelands" to which apartheid consigns them for the purpose of denying them political rights in South Africa. It is only a hint; this is the typical crab-like performance of a leadership that, while anxious to disarm foreign and domestic criticism, is no less anxious to avoid further erosion of its core white constituency. But it is a major event all the same.

Among whites, liberals reacted with cautious approval. The Afrikaner element that has broken with Mr. Botha found confirmation of who believe in controlled change to survive.

Here it is fascinating to ask what Mr. Botha had in mind by allowing South Africa's best known nationalist, the long-imprisoned Nelson Mandela, to give a rare interview to a (British) newspaper just now. Last month Mr. Botha said he would not negotiate with any group favoring change through violence. Mr. Mandela now says that his African National Congress would halt violence if the authorities "legalize us, treat us like a political party and negotiate with us." That, like Mr. Botha's

Not an Attorney General ready to give the unwelcome advice that the Eleven months have passed since Edwin Meese went before the Senate Judiciary Committee seeking confirmation as Attorney General. Although slight of legal stature, he had the warm endorsement of a popular president and seemed easily confirmable. But questions arose about his fitness for the office, and they were serious enough to require a special investigation by an independent counsel.

The counsel concluded that none of the charges warranted a criminal indictment, so the president renewed the nomination. This week the Senate returns to the crucial question: What qualifies Mr. Meese for this job?

There is much to be said for letting presidents have their choice of cabinet officers. But unless the qualifications are cut to fit the candidate, Mr. Meese is not a desirable choice. Some senators seem in no mood to measure the nominee. For them the key factors are Mr. Reagan's landslide re-election and the independent counsel's report that Mr. Meese has done nothing criminal. Yet senators voting to confirm or reject should apply a higher standard of what an attorney general ought to be.

The person entrusted with the Department of Justice need not be a legal scholar or master of every legal specialty under his direction, but he should be learned in the law and he should have distinguished himself in its practice and application. Moreover, he should aspire to be the conscience of any administration, guiding the president in setting its ethical and moral tone. He should become not only the president's advocate but also his chief legal adviser,

In such bargaining Americans have a role that is secondary but: to press unremittingly for change. The Reagan administration encourages change quietly, others push more forcefully. It seems to be having an effect.

law limits his client's power. When visible, Mr. Meese's approach to the law has been aggressively opportunistic. As White House counselor he sought to wipe out years of gains in civil rights by restoring tax exemptions to schools that discriminate against blacks. Even at the risk of abusing executive power, he led the effort to sabotage Congress's repeated affirmation of a law creating a federal program of lawyers for poor people. Without a trace of courtesy to a responsible adversary, he kept calling the Ameri-can Civil Liberties Union a "criminals' lobby." In explaining his failure to report financial favors by benefactors who then obtained government jobs, Mr. Meese convinced the independent counsel, Jacob Stein, that he attaches no legal significance to some of these transactions and simply could not remember others. That negates criminal intent but it does not make Mr. Meese a bloodhound when it comes to questionable conduct in high office. The United States has endured some undistinguished attorneys general. It has also been blessed with some whose achievements in law enforcement, civil rights and the protection of liberties marked them for honor. Mr. Meese would be a throwback to the kind of attorney general that the last Watergate prosecutor warned against: the political manager, the presidential buddy. The standard for performance in this critical job has been rising. Mr. Meese doesn't measure up.

Other Opinion

Pakistan remains not so much a nation with an accepted constitution as a collection of peoples held together by an army and by the pressures of the Cold War. It is riven, too, by the populist urban proletarian pressures which the Bhutto movement rode. The military could, if it so decided, replace the president overnight in classic Pakistani style. Radical elements of the army could unite with the quiescent urban mob. A relaxation of international tension could leave the United States less adamantly opposed to Sindhi or Baluchi autonomy. The new constitution may be a skillful patchwork quilt but it is no more than a quilt thrown over an unmade bed.

The problems that President Zia inherited remain. They are the problems Pakistan has juggled since its bloody birth. There is good reason to suppose that those problems will outlive even the adroit President Zia, his Islamic republic and the restricted assemblies he is calling into being.

- The Singapore Monitor. Meese Shouldn't Be Confirmed

If Edwin Meese is confirmed as attorney general, we will be taught a dismaying lesson about the state of our public ethics and about the moral code of the United States Senate.

In Washington, it seems, the finding of the independent counsel that there was insufficient evidence to prosecute Mr. Meese for actual crimes is being interpreted as a clean bill of health that should lead to his speedy confirmation by the Senate. But the independent counsel's 385-page report is anything but a vindication. It contains detailed, largely uncontested evidence of Mr. Meese's low regard for ethics in government and of his willingness to engage in behavior that raises the most serious questions about his fitness to become our country's chief law-enforcement officer. The president of a large university asked me last spring: "How can you and I continue to try to teach young men and women to recognize moral standards if the Senate votes that what Ed Meese did does not bar his confirmation as attorney general of the United States?"

— Archibald Cox, a former Watergate special prosecutor who teaches law at Boston University, writing in the Washington Post.

1910: Asquith Needs Labor and Irish PARIS — The most eventful general election held in Great Britain for a century came to an end [on Jan. 29]. Liberals and Unionists practically balance one another, and Liberal Prime Minister Herbert Henry Asquith is dependent for his majority on such doubtful allies as the Labor Party and the Irish Nationalists. At the moment of the dissolution the Liberal Cabinet's platform included reform of the House of Lords and acceptance of the Lloyd George Budget. When the Lords threw out the Budget the Liberal Cabinet had a majority. Now that it has returned dependent on the Irish Nationalists there is little chance of the Upper House showing itself more complaisant. In its struggle to weaken the veto of the Lords the Cabinet can count on John Edward Redmond and his followers, as this would get rid of one of the obstacles to a Home Rule bill.

1935: Senate Rejects World Court WASHINGTON - The Administration suffered its first major defeat from the new Con-gress [on Jan. 29] when the Senate rejected the Robinson resolution providing for America's adherence to the World Court, by a vote of 52 to 36, which was far short of the two-thirds majority required for ratification of the protocols signed thirteen years ago. The vote came as a surprise, as shortly before the roll call Senator George W. Norris (Republican, Nebraska) and other court foes had indicated that their chances of defeating adherence were almost hopeless. A last-minute effort to assure passage of the Robinson resolution was exerted by the Administration, Secretary of State Cordell Hull visiting the Capitol [on Jan. 28] and pleading with opponents to withdraw their objection to the United States entering the Permanent Court of International Justice

When Opinion Leads, Government Follows

WASHINGTON — On most big issues, government leads and public opinion follows. Certain gut issues have the capacity to turn that process around. We are now witnessing a singular example in the framing of U.S. policy toward fam-ine relief in sub-Sahara Africa.

Until television brought the desperate faces of Ethiopia into American living rooms, it was a case of "out of sight, out of mind." The Reagan administration was maintaining an arm's-length relationship with the Marxist regime in Addis Ababa. The leaders there were de-scribed by Washington as hostile to America and indifferent to their own people. Limited quantities of food were channeled through pri-vate agencies such as Catholic Relief Services, which has worked in Ethiopia for a generation.

All that changed in October when the pictures from Korem, Makale and Bati dominated the daily news. Americans were profoundly affected, and showed their concern through private contributions and requests for more information on the causes of famine in Ethiopia and elsewhere in Africa.

Public opinion began to lead pol-icy. Washington moved quickly to approve increased aid requests through private agencies, and initiated a bilateral government grant of food. As the news media began re-porting from Sudan, Mali, Niger and Mozambique, Washington expanded U.S. aid throughout Africa. Another striking indication that policy is being shaped by public sentiment occurred last week when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee opened hearings on what By Robert J. McCloskev do to aid the famine victims, which is a topic that was not originally on the committee's agenda.

House members who had been to Ethiopia had earlier introduced a bill calling for more than $1 billion in supplementary assistance, and scheduled hearings for this week. All but two of the 64 co-sponsors are Democrats. Now the Republican side has announced a bill seeking $628 million. A current administration request calls for $235 million in new money while re-allocating other Agency for Interna-tional Development funds from existing accounts. Catholic Relief Services and other private agencies believe that the administration's proposal does not go far enough.
The contrast with last year is noteworthy. Congress then appropriated $150 million in supplementary aid after the administration argued that $90 million was sufficient. The administration went along re-luctantly, but not before it sought to attach an amendment for money for military aid in Central America. The effect was to encumber a "clean bill' that had broad congressional and public support with an amendment that had virtually none, and $60 million in desperately needed African aid was delayed in the pro-cess. If ever an administration was out of step with the will of the people, that was a clear example. In November the Agency for International Development called for a meeting of donor governments as a way to coordinate responses to Africa's needs. That was a wise step.

wars hinder food distribution.

more the U.S. government should If, as macro-planners contend. there is ample food to feed everyone on Earth, then the world community is neglecting — or at best dealing inadequately with - its moral responsibility. Thus a meeting of donor governments is a good idea.

But it now appears that Washington prefers to have the United Nations assume the catalyst role. Given that organization's proclivity for politicizing issues, not to mention the fact that the UN General As-sembly recently approved $73 mil-lion to build a conference hall in Ethiopia before addressing the famine, it is difficult to see what it could contribute to alleviating the conti-nent's food problem. It would be more appropriate to get the United Nations to work toward obtaining cease-fires in countries where civil response to the suffering in Africa is unprecedented in modern times. Their help will permit Catholic Relief Services to spend $15 million on programs in Ethiopia alone.

In Iowa, for example, where farm foreclosures are common, residents contributed $630,000 recently through a statewide appeal by the Des Moines Register to assist Catholic Relief Services and Church World Service programs.

Public opinion cannot always shape government policy so directly. When it does happen, as it has with the African famine victims, it generally makes good sense. This experience has shown us the kind of values that Americans truly cherish. It is good to be reminded.

The writer, a former U.S. ambassador to Cyprus, the Netherlands and Greece, is senior vice president of Catholic Relief Services. He contributed this comment to the Los Angeles Times.

General Rogers sees two ominous

By Philip Geyelin Why? General Bernard Rogers, the other is a growing temptation among "serious people, not just kooks," to think in terms of pacifism, neutralism, accommodation.

As these trends converge, he believes Europe might "wake up some morning" and find the Soviets in a commanding position - not to start a war, necessarily, but to subject sus-ceptible Europeans to irresistible diplomatic and economic blackmail

"I'm convinced that the time has come, or passed, for the common good of collective defense, to have a little give on the part of the intelligence community," he says. Even if he is wrong, the runaround he has been getting from Washington is a commentary on the Reagan administration's management of national security affairs.

The point is not so much whether release of this evidence would do everything the general imagines. The point is that he has been pressing what he thinks is an important case at the highest levels of the U.S. government and even getting a sympathetic he has not been getting is anything in the nature of a considered response reflecting a serious effort to choose between risks and opportunities. Instead, intelligence technicians have been bottling up useful and damning evidence at a time when (a) Europe-ans regularly fall short in meeting NATO commitments, (b) the Soviets are moving ahead in sheer numbers of tanks, helicopters and other armaments and (c) Senator Sam Nunn, the Georgia Democrat, is using his considerable prestige to round up Senate support for drawing down American forces if the Europeans fail to do more in their own behalf.

General Rogers believes that this would be the "unraveling" of the alliance. He sees hard-pressed and in many cases shaky European coalition governments under heavy pressure for social welfare spending. So he would try to strengthen their hand with public opinion.

Many Europeans seriously doubt the numbers — or even the existence of the Soviet intermediate-range ballistic missiles that constitute the rationale for the hard-won alliance agreement to deploy countervailing U.S. missiles in Western Europe. At least one recipient, Belgium, is having serious second thoughts. General show the sites and even the Soviet missiles, unmistakably. The European man on the street, he contends, does a lot of wishful thinking about the purely defensive posture of Warsaw Pact forces. "You can show the offensive nature of the Warsaw Pact if you can show the massive amounts of prepositioned river-crossing equipment, the massive amount of prepositioned pipe-line and their ability to lay that pipeline up to 90 kilometers a day. He also has photographic evidence of the location and the specific weaponry of Warsaw Pact units.

He has tested his theory. With the permission of Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger he did a slide show for a select group of European cabi-net ministers. "You could hear the breath being sucked in when they saw the pictures for the first time, says. He believes in it enough to have signed on for another two-year hitch. with the administration's blessing.

Few American authorities question his analysis. The debate is over what to do. And the remedy of choice, increasingly, is to think in terms of threats that the United States will simply walk away from the problem. General Rogers makes a good case that before it comes to that, the administration ought to lay out its best evidence of the Soviet threat and see how the Europeans respond. # The Later We Retire he Rot The Better

By Giles Merritt

B RUSSELS — Early retirement is now one of the most widely used tactics for combating unemployment. It is also folly. Far from retiring earlier, people should be thinking about extending their working lives well past their 65th birthdays. Current thinking holds that the middle-aged should "make room" in overcrowded labor markets for unemployed young people. But before long the strongest economic pres-sures will be those directed at keeping people out of the pension queues.

In the last few years the average age at which people retire has dropped dramatically. In Europe today something like three-quarters of all employees retire before reaching 65, and a third or more before 60. In America the shift is even more striking: In mid-1984 only 15.9 percent of men were still working at 65.

Statistics indicate that in 1900 twothirds of American men worked past the age of 65. If true, that was probably because there were no pensions for them to go to. But if today we keep on retiring people prematurely we could find ourselves in much the same position, for soon there may not be the pensions to draw on.

For a man to stop working at 55 is nowadays quite normal, and stopping at 50 no longer excites comment. Industrial restructuring and the streamlining of 19th century "rust-bowl" sectors like steelmaking and shipbuilding have made early retirement a respectable euphemism for tossing skilled men in their prime onto the scrap heap.

With the pressures of rising unemployment — in Europe at any rate. where EC unemployment is 13 million and will go to 15 million at least and maybe even 18 million — early retirement is inevitably seen as a safety valve. It is also widely reckoned a fair technique, as the retirees have enjoyed "their turn to work." while the alternative is for unemployed youth to molder and eventually decay into a politically volatile workless generation. No one doubts that urgent action has to be taken to ensure that Europe does not create a "lost generation" that will never work. But retiring people early is emphatically not the way. It is arguably creating an even more serious long-term problem than joblessness itself.

Even if people are not pushed into early retirement, the rising proportion of pensioners threatens to bankrupt the rich industrialized countries' pension schemes by the early 21st century. And with early retirement the crunch may instead come before the end of this century.

Last year the OECD warned its 24 industrialized member countries that by the year 2010 there will be a worldwide pensions crisis and that "the structure of pensions may come in question." For to accommodate the extra millions who by then will be depending on pensions, governments must either pump in much more money or pay out much less.

The problem is not just that there - will be more old people, but also that there will be fewer younger ones to support them. United Nations experts say the over-60s population will ave grown 90 percent by 2005 in a world where total population growth will be 70 percent. In other words, in the United States, for instance, there will be 51 million pensioners by 2020 instead of today's 26 million, and in Japan the position will be worse still. At present, due to World War II deaths, each pensioner is supported by 15 workers. By 2015, each will be supported by only three. Seniority-related pay, meanwhile, will by the 1990s have added a third to Japanese companies' present labor costs. In short, even a comparatively dynamic society like America's will by 1995 have the age profile that Florida has today. And the cost of keeping a steadily growing proportion of non-working people will be considerable. Europe's governments are well aware that the share of GDP taken by Social Security has gone from 12-18 percent in the early 1960s to 20-30 percent, and that share is bound to rise further. It costs six or seven times more to provide health care for a person past the age of 65.

The outlook for the national pension schemes' finances is also poor, as after the baby boom comes the baby bust; there will not be enough working-age people on present showing to support the elderly. Retiring workers early may seem a convenient way of wiping them off the unemployment statistics in the 1980s, but it is storing up double trouble for the future.

The word "scoff" was used in South Africa well before the Boer War. In the semi-desert Karoo region where I was born, food was called

"skoff" as early as the end of the 18th century when the "trekboers" still lived in their ox wagons on the veld. The word was brought to the Cape three centuries ago by Dutch sailors who spoke of "schalten" — to take a noon meal. In forming the Afrikasps language, the trekboers, many of whom were semi-literate, took words from Dutch, German and French, which were then spoken at the Cape, and simplified the spelling and pronunciation. "Schaften" thus became "skoff." The word is still used in the Karoo, where the local specialties are alled "Karoo skoff."

The word also means a shift isp: called "Karoo skoff." stage or trek, but is then spelled "skof." The trekboer's wife served a meal after each working lap.

Juba is not besieged by the rebels. But their entry into the southern province of Equatoria and their proximity to Juba, its capital, constitutes a new, pivotal phase in the civil war, according to Sudanese and Western residents here.

The rebellion in the south also poses the most serious challenge to President Nimeiri's government since the previous civil war ended 15 years ago, residents say.

For the past month, the Sudan People's Liberation Army broadcast has reiterated its intention to take Juba, compounding anxiety in this city of 190,000. Most residents here say the rebels would not try, not would they be able to, take Juba, for reasons that illustrate the war's politics. # Dole and Lugar: New Leaders Steer Senate Back Into Foreign Policy

By Helen Dewar

ASHINGTON — Despite loyalty to the Reagan administra-tion's global goals, the new Republican leadership of the Senate is showing a streak of free-thinking independence that could revive the Senate's role as a powerful force in shaping U.S. foreign policy. The two central players, Robert J. Dole, of Kansas, the majority leader, and Richard G. Lugar, of Indiana, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, have already pointed the Republican-controlled Senate down paths that could force change at the White House, Pentagon and State Department.

Senator Dole has been pushing a deficit-reduction plan that would deeply cut if not freeze President Ronald Reagan's costly military buildup, possibly further jeopardizing such weapons programs as the Senator Lugar has declared that covert U.S. aid to anti-government guerrillas in Nicaragua is no longer "viable" and pronounced the program to be virtually dead in Congress.

Moreover, both Mr. Dole and Mr. Lugar have put emphasis on independent initiative that is at least partly aimed at reviving the Senate as a creative national force in foreign policy. Such initiative was last seen when former Senator J. William Fulbright, an Arkansas Democrat, he aded the Foreign Relations Committee during the ferment over the

"I would like to have people in the future look back at this Congress an d sa y that it made a major effort to reinstill a bipartisan spirit in our con side ration of foreign policy issues," said Mr. Dole in answer to a quest on about his top priority for the session.

He not ed that the first substantive act of the Senate after it convened Jan. 3 was passage of a bipartisan resolution commending the administration's eff orts to resume arms control negotiations. At the Democrats' insistence, to be resolution included the appointment of official Senate "observers" to monitor the talks. In an interview, Mr. Lugar emphasized the fact that he and Mr. Dole have been admi nistration loyalists, but he used this fact to indicate they can be expected . to act independently of the White House when administration and Senat e priorities are at odds. We are both s. upporters of the administration but because of this loyalty we both ha ve an opportunity and obligation to speak out in independent ways," said Mr. Lugar. He subsequently proved the point in a speech to the National F ress Club that posed questions about some of the most basic tenets of U.S. foreign policy.

In terms of policy differences, Mr. Lug ar has spoken of the need to continue the Reagan administration's military buildup regardless of success or failure in arms control talks, while Mr. Dole has led the charge for across-the-board spending cutbacks, including in the military. But this may stem as much from their disparate roles as from any fundamental policy difference; they appear to work well together, and Mr. Dole has delegated chief responsibility for foreign policy issues to Mr. Lugar.

On basic policy, Mr. Dole and Mr. Lugar are expected to depart little from their script of their predecessors: Howard H. Baker Jr., of Tennessee, the majority leader who retired to consider a possible bid for the presidency, and Charles H. Percy of Illinois, who was chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee when he was defeated for re-election.

But Senator Percy tended to be more of an outspoken arms-control advocate than Mr. Lugar, at times crossing swords with the administration on the issue. And he generally tended toward more liberal positions than the Republicans as a whole in the Senate, making it difficult to forge a majority within his party. This factor contributed to the stalemate over foreign-aid authorization bills in three of the four years of President Reagan's first term. Senator Baker often assumed command of foreign policy issues when they reached a critical point.

Mr. Dole and Mr. Lugar opposed the SALT-2 treaty but backed the Reagan administration's strategy for moving to arms reduction talks, including the Space Defense Initiative, or SDL

"SDI has already made its first contribution to arms control" said Mr. Lugar in his Jan. 23 press club speech. "The Soviet Union is back at the negotiating table. We should not expect the SDI to do too much too quickly, but we should be prepared for the fact that this research effort is here to stay and that its consequences will be great."

Both sided with the administration in opposing the move last year by Senator Sam Nunn, a Georgia Democrat, to reduce U.S. troop levels in Europe unless NATO countries meet their financial commitments for support of the alliance. But they also contend that more burden-sharing

"Very frankly the Nunn amendment was a good thing as long as it didn't pass." Mr. Dole said recently. "Perhaps it has helped convince our NATO allies that we have a real problem on burden-sharing and that we in the United States take that problem very seriously."

Neither Mr. Dole nor Mr. Lugar figure in the strong trade protection-

As a Kansan, Mr. Dole has a strong interest in grain exports, which showed up in his vociferous opposition to the anti-Soviet grain embargo. Even though Indiana is a major steel-producing as well as agricultural state, Mr. Lugar has taken a lead in opposing quotas on steel imports and generally regards himself as a free-trader, although he recently endorsed continued restraint of the importation of Japanese automobiles.

Mr. Dole, however, has warned that protectionist pressures may gain in Congress unless obstacles to U.S. exports are removed. "Protectionist pressures here can be contained only if those industries now in ascendan- cy — like agriculture, telecommunications, advanced electronics and services — are allowed fully to compete in export markets." he said.

N broad terms, Mr. Dole has put his foreign policy priorities in these terms: "First, I think we need to make sure that our relations with our allies are in good order. We've got to keep the NATO alliance in good shape, keep pushing on burden-sharing - without being threatening — and doing what we can to resolve differences among individual NATO members. We've got to make some progress with Japan on our trade imbalance, so that doesn't disrupt what otherwise is a very sound and mutually beneficial relationship. We've got to continue our support for Israel without forgetting the legitimate interests of our other friends

"Second, we must follow through vigorously —as I know the administration intends — to seek effective nuclear arms control agreements with the Soviets. That's almost certainly going to be a long, tough, sometimes frustrating process, but we've got to try.

"Third, we should take a fresh look at a number of the regional trouble spots that we've been dealing with over the last few years — the Middle East, southern Africa, Afghanistan and South Asia . . .

"It may be that we will decide that what we're going on these issues is about right and we shouldn't change. But on some of them, I expect, a fresh look might allow us to better focus on our current goals and give us some fresh ideas about how to achieve these goals. And perhaps I should include here as a separate high priority doing something about the African food situation, though I regard that as much more of a humanitarian than foreign policy issue."

Mr. Lugar sketched out his concerns in a more philosophical vein in his press club speech, which was largely devoted to a lack of consensus over critical foreign policy issues in the United States, especially since the

In the aftermath of Vietnam, he said, "The United States has been and continued to be uncertain about the use of force in the conduct of American foreign policy. A broader popular involvement in foreign policy questions has deepened the historical reluctance of Americans to employ force to achieve our national purposes."

In poll after poll, he continued, "Americans express their concern about hostile governments which imperil our interests in Latin America and elsewhere. But in these same polls, Americans display an equal and overwhelming opposition to any course of action which might actually frustrate governments which are harmful to us."

Then he asked the following questions that are expected to be central to his reappraisal of U.S. foreign policy, starting with five or six weeks of wide-ranging, hearings that begin Jan. 31. "Do we really have vital interests all around the globe?" he asked, without pretending to have the answers. "Do we have the economic and military capabilities and the political will to support these interests with a safe margin of risk? Do we have a long-term, substantial and correct view of the Soviet Union. Do we have an appropriate understanding of the economic, political and spiritual forces that move nations?

Scientists Clash Over Space Defense; Some See 'Promise,' Others 'Tragedy'

By Henry Tanner International Herald Tribune

ERLIN — Albert Einstein was a lifelong pacifist. But when he was told that Nazi Germany was close to developing an ing to President Roosevelt, urging him to take "quick action" in atomic bomb research. After Hiroshima, Mr. Einstein became a fervent advocate of world government as the only way to prevent a nuclear holocaust. Robert J. Oppenheimer was in charge of the Manhattan Project, which produced the first atomic explosion. A few years later, with other U.S. scientists, he passionately opposed building the hydrogen bomb.

Today, scientists again are fervently taking

The issue now is President Ronald Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as "star wars," which many scientists say raises military, scientific and moral questions of a magnitude comparable to those resulting from presidential decisions on the atomic bomb.

Mr. Reagan's space defense system could bring vital changes in the "balance of terror" between the United States and the Soviet Union, Many think it could be decisive in making or breaking East-West negotiations on nuclear arms control for the next 50 years and determine the question of war or peace, even human survival.

A roundtable of about 20 U.S., Soviet and European scientists and officials early this month conveyed an impression of how these men talk among themselves when they argue about the "promise" or the "tragedy" inherent in the U.S. plans. The symposium was held at the Aspen Institute in West Berlin.

The discussions were polite — first names were used, almost exclusively — and the passions were reined in. But the disagreements over "star wars" were fundamental.

The U.S. program calls for $26 billion to be spent in the next five years on research to develop a space-based, anti-missile system that, if effective, would make the arsenal of Soviet intercontinental ballistic missiles obsolete.

TEROLD Yonas of the Pentagon, the scientist in charge of the Strategic De-fense Initiative research program, and Gilbert D. Rye, director of space programs for the National Security Council, argued strongly for the program. Other U.S. and European scientists questioned its feasibility as well as the American effort" with countermeasures, he basic political and strategic assumptions behind

Mr. Yonas asserted that the development of a "credible" U.S. space defense against ballistic missiles would leave the Soviet Union with few options and would induce them "to discontinue further investments in offensive nuclear weapons and to abandon their strategy based on a first-strike capability."

The challenge is to develop technologies "far ahead of any possible response." Mr. Yonas said. "This is the essence of our research pro-He said there would be dramatic innovations in the next five years and that deployment of the space defense system could begin "within the No one at the table questioned the need for U.S. military research in space. The fact that Moscow, too, is engaged in such research was not denied by the Soviet participants. But the U.S. scientists present who were not connected to the Reagan administration argued that anything short of a "perfect" space defense system not only would fail to deter the Russians from building more ballistic weapons but would actually compel them to build more and destroy, perhaps forever, the hope of any agreement on nuclear arms control.

They criticized U.S. civilian leaders, notably President Reagan and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, for holding out the impossible promise of a "perfect" defense.

He spoke of "the fallacy of the last move," the idea that U.S. weapons technology could said. "Ten thousand years from now people will

"This is as far from reality as putting a man on the sun or building a bridge to the moon," Mr. Ruina said. He said that the arms race has earning a living in space." shown that there is an answer to every new step one side may take, and that each adversary can

Several participants pointed out that the United States would probably be forced to test its space defense weapons at an early stage of their development. Such testing is prohibited under the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty with the Soviet Union. The U.S. would be forced to violate the treaty, they argued, making future arms talks virtually impossible. "The tragedy would be if we killed all chances of an arms agreement only to find out that there is no such thing as an effective missile defense," said Paul Doty, the professor in charge of the Department of Science and International Af-some but not all Soviet offensive weapons. Some asserted that the technology for such a limited objective either exists or could be developed relatively easily.

Alexei A. Vasilev, the principal Soviet participant and a leading member of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, said that, as a scientist, he would be inclined to ignore the U.S. space defense initiative as unrealistic. But, he said, as a political leader responsible for the security of his country, he could not.

N another subject, scientists pursuing civilian scientific and economic goals laid out ambitious plans of their own for the future of the space age.

"Next we will have to see whether we can go to the nearest star, said Roger Bonnet of France, who is in charge of scientific programs at the European Space Agency.

"We have been looking at Jupiter trying to understand how a thunderstorm is working there, and that's really amazing because we don't even know how a thunderstorm works on Earth," he said.

The moon is the "Panama Canal leading to Jupiter," said Heinz-Hermann Kölle, the director of the Aerospace Institute of the Technical University of West Berlin.

Mr. Kölle and others agreed that the moon must be turned into a "staging area," with a permanent installation there serving as headquarters, base camp and refueling station from which it would be possible to "go almost any-where in the solar system, including Jupiter." They explained that the moon can be reached with existing shuttle engines and that it can provide the oxygen that accounts for seveneighths of the fuel needed for "connecting lights" to other bodies in the solar system. Mr. Kölle expects the Earth's present population of 4.8 billion to double in 50 years. That population will require much more energy and, he said, solar power stations in space are possi-

Boeing and Airbus and others compete for each sale of a plane." RIANESPACE, the marketing arm of the European Space Agency that was started in 1980, oversees the production of rocket launchers by 35 industries in 11 European countries. It does not produce satellites.

When somebody tells us he wants to have a satellite launched, we order the launcher and conduct the launching operation." Mr. Iserland

He estimated that the world market for launchers and launchings would be between $1 billion and $2 billion a year for the next 15 years, and that Arianespace would get between 33 and 40 percent of the business. The rest will go to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration or to private industry in the United States after the U.S. space agency drops the Atlas Centaur and Thor Delta launchers, 25 it has decided to do.

Mr. Iserland said that the world market for satellites would be between $3 billion and $6 billion a year for the next 15 years.

Caesar Voute, a professor of geology and a specialist in remote-sensing programs from the Netherlands, made an impassioned plea to the hi-tech nations to develop and finance the distribution of space technology that could serve Third World countries.

Although the Earth now can be observed from space, he said, geological mapping in many parts of the world is still at the level used by the Egyptians 3,000 years ago.

He described an experiment in which soil-moisture measurements obtained by satellite have been turned over to a station in Niger where they are being used by African farmers stricken by drought.

Bad weather may be only an inconvenience to some people, he said, looking out on Berlin's frozen Wannsee, but it may make the difference etween life and death in many parts of the world unless the rich nations step in with the latest technology.

In the 27 years since the Soviets launched their first Sputnik, space has become so overcrowded that flight paths of U.S. shuttles must be charted to avoid collision with about 5,000 other orbiting objects, according to Mr. Doty. A recent shuttle passed within 14 kilometers (8.6 miles) of a satellite as both were traveling at a speed of about 10 kilometers a second, he said. The observation port of another shuttle was hit by an small object. Of 14,000 objects launched into space since the first Sputnik, about 9,000 have fallen to Farth or burned up in the atmosphere. That leaves 5,000 still in space, he said, about the same number as there are ships on the world's seas on any given day 3,000 years after man first started sailing.

Some scientists at the meeting said they feared that military men were gaining more and more influence on space policies both in the United States and in the Soviet Union, and that ficed to military objectives. NASA, until two years ago, received a greater share of the annual federal budget than did the military, but this trend has been reversed, a participant noted.

Mr. Yonas, the Pentagon scientist, countered that about half the funds spent on research for a space defense system also serve civilian uses.

Ungaro, Chanel Turn Out Gems

D ARIS — Tuesday was a good Iday for Paris couture, with Emanuel Ungaro and Karl Lagerfeld (for Chanel) delivering creme de la crème collections. The clothes looked like jewels and the feeling of luxury was supreme.

Chanel was also exceedingly quality-conscious, with pearly makeup matching the 18th-century pastel silks.

Although these clothes are supposed to go to a limited, almost confidential audience, couture is beginning to attract the trade as well. Sonja Caproni, in charge of fashion for 1. Magnin of San Francisco, attended all these collections. "I like them better than ready-to-

More European Executives Move Into Top Posts in U.S.

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

International Herald Tribune

EW YORK - Increasing numbers of European executives working for American companies overseas are finding that their corporate horizons are no longer limited to the subsidiary itself. In the past 10 years, U.S. companies overseas have increasingly replaced American managers with Europeans. These Europeans, in turn, are now moving into top slots at the parent corporations.

Still, the numbers are small. If there are barriers to the No. 1 and No. 2 corporate slots, they seem to be the same for all executives regardless of their passport. Senior executives point out that there isn't much room at the top in the first place.

"We must be rather a small club of Europeans at the president level of U.S. corporations," says J.P. van Rooy, the Belgian also British; Anthony J.F. O'Reilly, chief executive officer of H.J. Heinz Co., from Ireland; Michel C. Bergerac, chairman and chief executive of Revlon Inc., from France, and Pierre Gousseland, chairman of AMAX Inc., the big metals concern, also from In comparison, there are hardly any Americans heading large European companies. Foreign accents, for one, do not seem to be a problem in U.S. boardrooms. "I could never manage to lose mine," says Mr. Bergerac of Revion. Most of the executives that have made it in the United States started out one of three ways. A few, of course, have arrived from the European subsidiaries of U.S. companies. Some came to the United States during World War II and planned U.S. careers from the outset. Others arrived on scholarships, and stayed on to

Mr. Bergerac, for example, who came to the United States on a Fulbright Scholarship, spent a year working on farms and ranches. "It wasn't a conscious decision," he says of his decision to join Cannon Electrical, a California-based company that was later bought up by ITT Corp. "Getting the opportunities is what is important here. Unlike in Europe, youth is considered a virtue."

LEARLY, there is no major trend under way; European executives are not swarming into the country to fill top U.S. corporate positions. For one thing, U.S. companies who do not wish to promote from within typically look for talent among competing U.S. companies in their industry. "A client wouldn't want us to look outside the United States until we exhausted our search in the U.S.," said Mike Hyde, a partner with the executive search firm of Egon Zehnder in New York. "Seldom will a U.S. company, for a top position, say I want you to look around the world."

For most Fortune 500 companies, the U.S. market is still the primary source of management talent. "If you get a very large corporation with 27 local managers, it doesn't mean there is a 27to-I chance that the CEO be a foreigner," said Alexander Brody, the Hungarian-born president and chief executive of Dentsu Young and Rubicam Inc., a major advertising company. "But it's not impossible to make it. Of course manufacturing companies will look for their people where business is large."

Although there are no available statistics for the number of European executives employed by U.S. corporations, Brooks Chamberlin, vice president of Korn Ferry International, the executive search firm, suspects there are more Europeans in U.S. service businesses - banking, insurance and management consulting — than in manufacturing. "In the service industries the

U.S. Steel Rebounds In 1984

$493-Million Net After Loss in '84

PITTSBURGH — U.S. Steel Corp., the leading American steel producer, reported Tuesday 1984 profit of $493 million, compared with a loss of $1.16 billion in 1983. Earnings per common share were $3.52 for 1984. Sales reached $19.1 billion for the year after $17.5 billion in 1983.

The company's fourth-quarter profit was $29 million, or a loss of 1 cent per common share after accounting for dividends on preferred stock. Sales for the quarter were $4.7 billion.

In the last three months of 1983, U.S. Steel had a loss of $983 million on sales of $4.7 billion.

In steel and related resources, the company had a $752-million turnaround during 1984, posting annual operating profit of $142 million after a loss of $610 million

A major U.S. Steel subsidiary, Marathon Oil Corp., posted operating income before foreign income taxes of $1.27 billion on sales of $10.2 billion last year, compared with nearly $1.14 billion on sales of $9.3 billion in 1983.

"We expect another profitable year in 1985, with continued emphasis on debt reduction and operating efficiency," David M. Roderick, the U.S. Steel chairman, said in

Mr. Roderick called the annual earnings "especially satisfying" in light of sagging demand for steel and lower oil prices.

"These results indicate the success of actions taken during the past three years to diversify, restructure and streamline our operations," he said.

■ Preliminary Steel Ruling

In China, an Improbable Comeback

By John F. Burns New York Times Service

CHONGOING, China - Each morning at daybreak, a group of old capitalists gather in a drafty warehouse in this port city to plot a little competition for the state-owned shipping company that more or less expropriated the Yangtze River 30

Long before the mists lift from the old Chaotianmen port, where freight still moves on shoulder-poles and barges rest on mudflats at low tide, work is in hand on an improbable comeback. Minsheng Shipping Co., lion of the Yangtze before the Communists came to power in 1949, has risen from oblivion to challenge for cargos once again.

From nothing a few months ago, Minsheng has already started to stir the muddy waters around Yangtze River Shipping Co., the state-owned giant that dominates the 1,800-mile (2,880-kilometer) river. The privateer's barges and tugs are winning contracts with lower tariffs, well-drilled crews and on-time deliveries. Local shipyards are working around the clock to expand its fledgling fleet, and the first profits are starting to show.

For Lou Guoji, the company's 61-year-old general manager, it is the realization of a dream. The company, started in 1926 by his father. Lou Zuofu.

grew over time until it employed 8,000 workers. It helped keep Nationalist China alive by running the gauntlet of Japanese bombing during World War II. The older Lou was called a patriot by Mao Zedong, but in 1954 his 148 vessels were seized without compensation and Minsheng disbanded.

But now, under China's new leadership, competition and profit are back in, and survivors of the property-owning class are being asked to brush up old skills. Banks that have been sitting on expropriated millions are easer to lend some back to new businesses with the old entrepreneurs.

"Just like my father. I intend to see that this company is the best and most efficient in China," Mr. Lou told a visitor as they walked out to a barge sitting below the towering gorges where the Yangtze and Jialing rivers meet. We will give the state-owned companies the competition they need to shake them from their 'iron-rice-bowl' mentality, where everybody has a secure job no matter how little he does."

As China's leadership prods the entire country into an experimentation with capitalist economics Minsheng is the largest and most famous old company to make a comeback. It is a modest business so far with two tugs and seven barges, (Continued on Page 13, Col. 5)

Productivity Of U.S. Business Rose in 1984

WASHINGTON - The productivity of America's nonagricultural business rose 3.1 percent last year, reflecting a booming economy in the first half of 1984 and an encouraging year-end recovery, the Labor Department said Tuesday.

The rise was less than the 3.5-sion of the first two years of the Reagan administration, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

The bureau's productivity index rose 1.5 percent in 1981 and 0.2

Productivity is a measure of the volume of goods and services the economy puts out in an hour of paid working time.

In the nonfarm business sector in 1984, output grew 8.5 percent and hours worked rose 5.2 percent. The increase in nonfarm output was the largest since 1950 and the increase in hours was the biggest since the Labor Department began collecting the information in 1947.

Including the volatile agriculture sector, all business productivity rose 3.6 percent in 1984 over 1983, the largest jump since the 3.6-per-cent increase of 1971. Output in 1984 including agriculture rose at 8.8 percent, the fastest rate in more than 30 years. A 5percent gain in hours was the largest recorded since 1947.

in the fourth quarter, nonfarm productivity was up 1.7 percent, while in the third quarter it had declined 1.1 percent in a slackening economy, the bureau said.

The fourth-quarter figure was a very positive one given a fairly sluggish performance for the economy," said Allen Sinai, chief economist and managing director of Shearson Lehman/American Ex-

Dollar Is Higher In Quiet Session; Pound Steadies

NEW YORK - The dollar

turned higher in quiet, late trading Tuesday, reversing earlier losses. The British pound stabilized after falling to record lows in Europe on Monday. Daniel Holland, an assistant vice president at the Discount Corp. of New York, said the prospect of dollar sales by central banks kept the U.S. currency from rising. But no intervention was reported Tuesday.

Late dollar rates in New York, compared with late rates Monday, included: 3.173 Deutsche marks, from 3.1605; 2.663 Swiss francs, from 2.658, and 9.695 French francs, from Frank Pusateri, a foreign-ex-change analyst, said the dollar received a lift from one large purchase of the currency. He said trading was so light that the transaction had an exaggerated impact on exchange rates.

In London, the pound recovered to $1.1152 Tuesday as OPEC ministers in Geneva worked on a price-cutting plan to stabilize the oil market among the Organization of Oil Exporting Countries. The pound had fallen to $1.111 after discord at Monday's session threatened to break up the 13nation oil cartel.

To Improve Civil Aviation

BEIJING - China, which last vear purchased 19 passenger aircraft from foreign manufacturers, announced Tuesday that it has decided to speed up modernization of its civil-aviation fleet.

An official of the Civil Aviation Administration of China told the state-run news agency. Xinhua, that last year's purchases represented the nation's largest aircraft purchases

Xinhua did not reveal the cost of the 19 aircraft, which are seven Boeing 737-200s, nine Soviet-built Tu-164s and three European Airbus A-310s.

Fifteen out-of-date planes will be retired from the fleet in 1985, the official said, adding that more jetliners and advanced telecommunication and radar equipment would go into service. The Civil Aviation Administration's major tasks at present are updating the air fleet, ensuring safety and improving the quality of service," said the official, who declined to be identified by name. The Chinese government has decided to increase investment to modernize its civil air fleet," he said An aging administration Sovietbuilt turboprop airliner crashed in Jinan on Jan. 18, killing 38 of 41 decided to decentralize the Civil Aviation Administration and separate its government functions from

"Five new international and domestic airline companies will be set up and a number of new local airline companies will also be established," it said.

"This will intensify competition and bring about better service. It will also tend to accelerate the development of China's civil aviation

In the 1950s and 1960s, most of the agency's planes were purchased from the Soviet Union. In the 1970s, Beijing bought 35 Trident jetliners from Britain and more than 30 aircraft from Boeing and McDonnell Douglas of the United States. Five of the Boeing aircraft are 747 jumbo jets.

At Bache Securities, we see the pieces to fuel a major U.S. market rally falling into place. U.S. inflation is down, interest rates are falling and we see solid earnings growth rather than a recession in 1985.

The time to take advantage of the U.S. market is now, but not without our 1985 Investment Outlook. It offers all our thinking, plus the 45 stocks we recommend for the coming year and many promising bond opportunities.

Make sure the U.S. market doesn't take off without you. Call or send in the coupon to the Bache Securities office nearest you.

Heileman's Offer to Buy

Pabst Stock Expires

The Associated Press

LA CROSSE, Wisconsin — A tender offer by G. Heileman Brewing Co. for Pabst Brewing Co. stock expired Tuesday with no immediate word on whether the La Crosse brewer would extend the SII-pershare. $70-million offer for stock of the Milwaukee company.

Pabst had agreed last month to be acquired by Heileman, which had in turn agreed to self Pabst's brewery in Tumwater, Washington, and some Pabst brands to a California brewer, Paul Kalmanovitz to satisfy U.S. Justice Department antitrust concerns. Mr. Kalmanovitz's holding company, the S&P Co., announced Monday that he was making a $10-per-share offer for Pabst stock, an offer valued at $64 million. $64 million.

BUSINESS ROUNDUP

Banks to Sell Swiss Watch Group

BIENNE, Switzerland - Swiss banks, which rescued the country's two principal watchmakers from bankruptcy two years ago, have unveiled plans to sell the restructured group to Swiss investors. Asuag-SSIH, which the banks created by merging two existing companies, are the makers of Omega, Tissot, Longines and other classic watch brands.

The company announcement on Monday noted that it had renumed to profitability last year after posting an operating loss of 87 million Swiss francs ($32.7 million) in 1983.

The company said that 7 percent of its shares will be sold to a Swiss business consultant, Nicolas Hayek, and to Stephan Schmidheiny, a Swiss industrialist. Additionally, a group of Swiss investors is being offered an option on 51 percent of share capital, the company said.

The company said that Pierre Arnold, the former head of the Swiss retail chain Migros, would become president and chief executive

HOW CONTRARIANS REALIZED 800% PROFITS

In 1982, while the DOW was dropping under 800, when the majority of seers were bearish, we rebuied the consensus, predicting "THE DJI WILL TOUCH 1,000 BEFORE HITTING 75:13". It is also riveting to recall that st, or near, the nadir of despair, a prestigious publication featured a story hear Illned: "The Death of Equities". Their orthodoxy boomeranged; the Bull rampaged to 1290, our optimism was vindicated. After the market soared, the same magazine released an article entitled: "The Re-Birth of Equities:". Once again, they were myopic; the market sagged. A month ago, Business Week published a lengthy di scourse with the scalding title: "The Death of Mining", an obituary for the North American mining industry.

Our cerebral juices stir, we challenge their prosaic thinking. "Power Elitists" are pre-condition.

into weakness, to self into strength, as we recognized when our researc there recommended BOEING at $ 16, FORD around $ 17, G.M. at $ 39, SEARS under $ 19 (before splits), and other seasoned shares that the "Street" once scorned, misguided by herd instinct. What gurus fail to divine is that "misery" has already been factored into the price of AMAX, ASARCO, INCO, NEV/MONT, NORANDA and I PHELPS DODGE, that to sell after the 'Group' has been decimated is to defy logic. When Elitists are ready fo peddle their inventories, the Group will undergo a metamorphosis; fiscal events are rarely spontar leous combustion, movements are orchestrated.

Our forthcoming letter discusses why the DJI will gallop over 15/100, why mining shares will recover; in addition, CGR focuses upon a low-priced equity with the dynamics to vault to prominence, emulating the success of a recently recommended "special situation" that escalate 20 800% in a brief time-span. ## Improbable Comeback Story on China's Yangtze

4,500 tons in all. Its headquarters are two dimly lit, unheated rooms in a building belonging to the stateowned monopoly that is supposed to be shaken from its sloth by its tenant's competition.

Minsheng's revival aims at something better. The spur came from a visit to the city by the secretary-general of China's Communist party, Hu Yaobang, who ordered that something be done about shipping. Most industrial growth is coming along the coasts, where markets and materials are less hampered by transportation. The Yangtze.

Mail from across the country quickly brought more than 2,000

Compared with 1954, the new Minsheng has an uphill climb. Old Mr. Lou had ships sailing through-out Asia, and had bought vessels in Canada and the United States. He owned a shipyard, a coal company, a textile plant and a hospital.

From the 1920's, when foreign companies dominated Yangtze navigation, he used mergers, tariff cuts and wartime derring-do to make Minsheng the dominant force on the river. Potentially one of China's richest men, he gave much of his wealth to charity.

This has smoothed the way for lent of $1.4 million, and on Oct. 1, and wages, to hire and fire staff and

Mr. Lou has formulated ambitious plans. In three months he exob applications from captains, pects to have four tugs and 21 barges plying the river. By the end deckhands and engineers. of the year the company will have 700 employees, he says, and ought to be expanding into all the areas of the old Minsheng — shipbuilding, coal mining, textile manufacturing

Meanwhile, at the offices above the wharf, a camaraderie has developed. Fifty of the company's 200 employees were with the old com-pany. Jiang Chansui, 78 years old, returned to write the company's rule book, and says he has not enjoyed himself as much in years. Here, we can all develop our talent" he said. The company has its own blue uniform and motto, "Have you fin-today?" The office walls are papered with handwritten slogans, but their topic is production, not politics.

Mr. Lou spent nearly 30 years working as a hired hand in his father's old coal business after it was expropriated, and he and his brother both suffered along with the rest of the old property-owning class during the cultural revolution.

By Don DeLillo, 326 pp. $16.95. Viking, 40 West 23d Street,

Reviewed by Richard Eder

D ON DeLILLO assembles a scene of con-temporary American well-being out of the civilized customs of a college town; and contaminates it. The contamination comes literally from a cloud of noxious gas escaping from a ruptured railroad tanker. But the poisonous leak is related to something more general: the expedients of an encroaching technology whose means displace our ends and our

It is a novel of disintegration, of familiar things hijacked and spoiled, of nature, love and civility leached and estranged the way a familiar face grows strange in a dream. It is a novel of hairline prophecy, showing a desolate and all-too-believable future in the evidences of an

The wonder, though, is the sense of well-being that steals around us as we read it. It is the feeling of being in the best of hands. The author is Charon as a master mariner; he brings us across the Styx in a lilting maneuver that is so adept that we can't help laughing as we go. Indeed, "White Noise," besides being prophetic and sad, is very lunny.

Jack Gladney, his wife Babette, and four children by various marriages live in the bucolic Midwestern town of Blacksmith. They are a tender, nervy bunch: they cherish and surprise each other, and DeLillo portrays them with an endearing warmth.

They live the normalcies of an academic community, yet all these normalcies have a wild, parodic edge to them. Jack's academic specialty is Hitler; he gives courses in Advanced Nazism and tutors his Nazism majors.

He is ensconced, appropriately enough, in the department of American pop culture. Babette, warm and upbeat, teaches adult education classes in posture, and in eating and drinking. Babette is Jack's fourth wife; one of his previous wives lives in a Hindu ashram in Montana; another works for the Central Intelligence Agency. A 14-year-old son, Heinrich, is preternaturally old with up-to-the-minute scientific knowledge; he is growing bald and Information - the "White Noise" of the title - invades and displaces. Jack feels a sense of validation by higher authority when the electronic machine at his bank confirms that his balance is roughly what he supposes it to be. Shopping at the supermarket is a rite, and its profusion of food is a guarantee that society is still holding together. Objects are transient.

When Jack passes a garage sale, he thinks of Odd things occur. The school is evacuated one day because of a real or suspected toxic emanation; one of the teachers was reported to be rolling on the floor and speaking in foreign languages. Wilder, the Gladneys' toddler, cries for seven straight hours one day, and then stops suddenly. These are signs, omens.

evacuation sites. Gladney is initially skeptical. These things don't happen to professors, he says, "but to people in mobile homes in the

The ace and king of hearts were taken, and South took note of the appearance of the jack on his left. According to the principle of restricted choice, the jack was much more likely to be part of a doubleton than a false card from J-10, so South finessed the nine on the way back.

Soccer's First Knight Returns to the City of His Legend

LONDON - Give an Englishman time and he fondly turns to nostalgia.

His letters now carry postage stamps de-picting the lost age of steam railways — great old individuals like the Flying Scotsman, the Golden Arrow and the Cheltenham Flyer and his sporting literature harks back to Stan Matthews, the wizard of the dribble.

Sir Stanley, the first soccer knight, turns 70 on Friday, and on Monday, after they have done feting him in Toronto, where he sertled, he will make a rare return to Stoke-on-Trent, the English potteries city where he and his legend took shape.

There will be a banquet in the Sheraton Center in Toronto, a grand ball in Stoke, and, age never having withered Matthews's addiction, at least one gentle game of soccer for him to express himself.

Memories of the old maestro, revived in baggy pants and sepia tones, became endemic last weekend. The most cynical of soccer scribes dioped their pens into human kindness; the young observers among them suddenly became witnesses of the prime of Stanley Matthews.

More than one would suspect have memories that stretch back to swept-back hairstyles, parted down the center and held down by Brylcream. In their streets, every kid shuffled up to an opponent, lowered the left shoulder, flicked the ball right, and shot by the unbalanced defender. Second-generation

Since I, alas, confess to missing out — to coming into play when tactical bores were beginning to re-invent the game so that No. 7 was nothing but another functionary - I gratefully latch onto this descriptive prose from one J.P.W. Mallalieu:

"Have you ever watched a dragonfly, how it hovers in one spot with its wings vibrating and then apparently, without changing gear, darts away at top speed?" he wrote.

"Many times I have seen Matthews, the ball as ever at his feet, hemmed in by a watchful opponent. There has been no room to move, so Matthews has hovered, his whole body vibrating, while his opponent watched.

ROB HUGHES

"Suddenly Matthews has made his dart to the right and his opponent has darted with him. It is only seconds later that we and his opponent see that Matthews has in fact dart-

A marvelous vignette, though possibly col-ored by the gentleman's political leanings. For most other followers insist that Matthews, "the one-trick magician," invariably feigned to go left but ended up sprinting down the right touchline outside his oppo-

By the time my generation caught up, Mat-thews was nearing 50, still playing First Divi-sion, still performing the same tease, able by then to put a man on the seat of his pants almost by reputation alone.

Speed off the mark was a winger's asset, but more than anything, Matthews used instinct to know precisely when a defender's balance was toppling, and then a devastating bodyswerve to spring clear. I doubt any matador did it better in the bullring.

Bow-legged and bony, he would set up goals with crosses that, so legend has it, not only delivered the beauty old better hall with only delivered the heavy old leather ball with unerring accuracy but also with the lace facing the other way, so as not to hurt the centerforward's head.

He was a pro through 35 seasons, well over 1,000 games, and, at 41, nearing the last of his 54 internationals, I just barely recollect him bemusing the great Nilton Santos while England scored four times against Brazil at Wembley.

His astonishing longevity was a product of three things: obsessional love of soccer, fanaticism for fitness and the era that placed more emphasis on artistry than long-distance

Matthews was born two miles from Stoke, son of Jack, "the Fighting Barber of Hanley," whose nifty footwork serviced 350 featherweight boxing bouts. Taboos of alcohol and tobacco were instilled from the cradle; deep breathing and wrestling with chest expanders were an order of the early morning and father's severe regimen bred Stan's introver-

The player inside him, however, was liberated at 11. Until then school center-half, he broke rank to score eight goals in one game (who says Franz Beckenbauer invented attacking libero?).

Very much a winger - though modern coaches, refusing to acknowledge anything good came from the past, call them "wide men" — Matthews became Stoke City property. Office boy at 15, first teamer at 17, England International at 19.

After war years spent on the RAF's wing, he transferred to Blackpool where he could run his hotel and inhale sea air. And in 1953 the nation inhaled the Matthews final, the pure theatre of a supposedly aging star of 38 fulfilling his ambition to win the FA Cup.

Gray newsreel revives the last 20 minutes in which Blackpool, 3-1 down, astonishingly won, 4-3. It forgets how injury reduced Bolton to effectively nine men, how others scored the goals. Stan was, by destiny, the

Not noted for industry - indeed indignant if passes came a foot too short - Matthews is thus remembered as Wembley's Pimpernel, dancing here, darting there, desperate to in-spire one of history's comebacks. As a performance it hardly equaled his three goals, all left foot, struck from inside-forward where he had replaced an injured England colleague against Czechoslovakia in 1938; in lasting value it was second to Matthews's return to Stoke in 1961, lifting his club to promotion from Division Two and the crowds from 10,000 to 33,000.

There followed, after 50, a brief, tainted attempt at management with nearby Port Vale, a club caught making underhand payments. Stan then went abroad, walking out on a long marriage, and nomadically treading the turfs of Malta, Australia, South Africa, the United States and, finally, Canada.

He was welcomed in every port as a coach; known everywhere for sorcery that transcended the difficulty of a pre-television age. One hopes his homecoming next week will do Sir Stanley no ill.

The Victoria ground stadium he will find more palatial and more empty than ever he knew it. The team, youngsters without suffi-cient guile, is marooned hopelessly at the foot of Division One. The manager recuperating from nervous exhaustion. The crowd long gone, and the bank overdrawn up to half a million pounds.

True, his No. 7 shirt is worn by the best Stoke has — Mark Chamberlain, dubbed "the Black Matthews," who hopes soon to be sold to a worthy club. It is cruel, but possibly true, that Matthews could take the field in his overcoat and at his age waltz around the defense wearing his first club's colors.

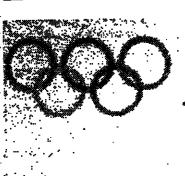

It may also be that he would fail, today, to measure up to the media bassle, the requirement to sweet-talk into a microphone before, immediately after and (down South America way) during play.

And that failure would be our loss, proof that we no longer know how to let a man's ability do his talking.

Stan Matthews, at age 48, still dancing and darting.

A change for Olympic medalist Scott Hamilton: There will be no new title this year.

After all those years in which his existence was carefully arranged to meet the demands of those peak moments, Hamilton's schedule has been revised. He is appearing in Ice Capades performances. He will skate in two shows at Madison Square Garden on Wednesday, two on Thursday, one on Friday night, Hamilton said. "I'm not about to, first-place Boston in the Atlantic coaches Monday to fill out the rosthree on Saturday, two on Sunday. do that."

There are two clearly defined parts to his skating these days. In the first half of the show, Hamilton performs a competitive routine. In the second half, with the house lights on and with a microphone in his hand, he encourages children to go wild. He teaches the fine points of The Wave, and if the kids don't get it right the first time, Hamilton has been known to remind an audience that the crowd at a nearby

He shares the audience with blue Smurfs when he performs in the West, multicolored Sporks in the East. Years of effort were required for Hamilton to convince the establishment of the sport that a 5-foot-3 (160-centimeter) skater could reach the same athletic achievements of someone much taller. Yet when that convincing was finally completed, he moved on and took advantage of the economic opportunity that comes with a gold medal, only to share a stage with Smurfs.

He was always conscious of the balance within the sport of athletic skill and artistry. Now, at different times, he appreciates the added artistic license and misses the competitive urges that a show can seldom satisfy. "The greatest feeling in skating is the 10 minutes after you win," he said. "Because you see that everything you've done - all the work and all the time that you've put into it, injury and everything else - was worth it. The feeling of accomplishment. The ego inflation you get from just winning a competition. from just winning a compension.

That 10 minutes is the greatest NHL Standings thing in the world. That's what you work all year for, that 10 minutes. Then you have it forever, the fact that you did it, and you won it, and you proved yourself. I'm going to miss those 10 minutes for a long

Medicine's Bitter Bill

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — I recently underwent the experience of pay-I N derwent the experience of paying a hospital bill out of pocket. As a result of the experience, I have fools and masochists court the vendiscovered an important cause of geance of anesthesiologists. inflation, which economists seem to have overlooked.

Like so many great discoveries, this one will seem obvious when I disclose it.

You didn't see it before, friend, plained because you have not had to pay a hospital bill with your own hardearned money. And why should ance companies, or by combina-tions of the two. And here lies the key to my discovery.

The hospital people who compile your bill naturally assume that it will be paid in the bulk by some immense bureaucracy wallowing in

These hospital people — decent, humane people devoted equally to physical and moral antisepsis — never imagine that the bill they toil night and day to lengthen might have to be paid by a human being, a person made of the same fragile clay as they and, as such, just as capable as they of being financially destroyed when confronted by double-digit aspirin tablets.

The bureaucracies, upon receiving such a bill, will commit it to amazing machines accustomed to dealing in billions though operated by modestly paid humans whose spirit has been broken by the machines. Will such people, humbled by their sense of inferiority to the machines, intervene to say, "Here, here, machine! You don't intend to pay that absurdly inflated hospital bill, I trust?"

They will not. The Pentagon has demonstrated with blood-chilling effect that such whistle-blowers always end up sleeping with the fish-

So the hospital bill compilers labor to produce bills like this one, which asks me to pay a couple of big bills for an anesthesiologist.

telephone. "You are paying the bill with your own money From his gasps, I gathered it was a first for him.

I am still negotiating on a few disputed thousands, but the hospital has been merciful since determining that I wasn't joking about the money coming from a human.

From this experience, I conclude that the reason bills are grotesquely inflated in certain areas of American life is the billing agent's assumption that he can do his worst without causing any human pain. This explains the comic absurdities of the bills that military contractors send to the Pentagon. It is not as though Cap Weinberger will have to sell his car to pay them; something monstrously freighted with money and called "the government" will pay them.

In the same way, fancy lawyers charge $250 an hour for their services. That's $500,000 a year for a lawyer on the 40-hour week, but no human beings are paying that kind of money, it is paid by corporations — things — which in turn account it to the expense of doing business, thus reducing their tax bills so that — aha! — something monstrously freighted with money and called "the government" is really doing the paying. Juries understand this, of course; they dispense millions to people suing for libel and medical malpractice. The theory is: It's no skin off anybody human. And so we get Pentagon hammers at the price of gold and the double-digit aspirin

The Durability of Ann-Margret

By Stephanie Mansfield Bashington Post Service

WASHINGTON — There is one scene in Ann-Margret's film repertoire that says it all. It's a bedroom scene, in the 1965 "Cincinnati Kid." But it's not her sultry purt or sex-kitten strut that is so quintessentially Ann-Margret.

She kneels on a bed, clad in a scanty negligee, a jigsaw puzzle spread before her. She takes a piece and places it on the puzzle. It doesn't fit. She tries forcing it. It still doesn't fit. Karl Malden. playing her gambler husband, scowls at her, telling her to give up. She cocks an eyebrow, picks up a nail file, shaves away one side of the piece and bangs it into place with her fist.

Determination. That and a sly vulnerability are what make Ann-Margret, 43-year-old motorcycle-riding grandmother and veteran of 38 movies, one of the most durable stars Hollywood ever dished up.

Never mind all the bimbo parts ("Kitten With a Whip," "Bye-Bye Birdie," "The Pleasure Seekers," "Bus Riley's Back in Town"). the steamy gyrations ("Viva Las Vegas") or the exchanges with leading men from Steve McQueen to Elvis Presley.

Joe Namath to Jack Nicholson. "I knew I had something to offer in the way of dramatic ability a long time ago," she said, sipping tea in her Washington hotel room. She was in town to promote the British film "Return of the Soldier. It is a breakthrough of sorts for the Swedish-born actress. She is cast as a dowdy, aging spinster — a part, she said, for which American directors would never have considered her.

"It was a challenge not to stand out like a sore thumb, but I never felt intimidated," she said, referring to her co-stars - Glenda Jackson, Julie Christie and Alan Bates, "Did I 'surprise' people? I just think it's so funny." She laughed with gusto. "That word has been used so many times. I love surprising people."

Recalling her early career, she said in her familiar, little-girl whisper: "I was extremely serious about my work. Always. The roles were fluff."

Ann-Margret: "Much more of a peaceful feeling."

Whatever talent she may lack — no one would confuse her with Meryl Streep — she has more than made up for in hard work. She is known as tireless performer, a total professional, "I've been known to be obsessive." But there is one thing even Ann-Margret's determination cannot overcome — her inability to have children. "We've been trying for 13 years," she said. Her husband has three children from his first marriage, and Ann-Margret is a step-grandmother.

She has been off the stage for nearly two years. Can she live without the applause? "That's interesting," she said, staring into space, "It's interesting because I don't miss it - for the first time in my life. I guess. I get it now from doing a role, from acting, I'm gratified when I come home from a day's work and I've done the best I can in portraying a character. I get that same feel-ing of grantude."

She placed her hand over her heart, "It's much more of a peaceful feeling going on in here. I'm very lucky." she said, knocking the table again. "that I'm not crazier than I am."

Her next project will be starring in a made-for-television movie about a Midwestern teacher who is raped, becomes pregnant and decides to keep the baby. Again, not a typical role for a woman once considered some-thing of a Hollywood joke. "I really feel for people who come out of a different area of the entertainment world and go into drama. It's much easier for someone to come out of the ranks of the New York theater, off-Broadway or whatever."

The way Ann-Margret did it.
